THE FIRST GAME.

The New National Nine in the Field-A De feat for the "Browns." A meaner or more disagreeable day for a game of base-ball than that of yesterday could not be found if put up specially to order. The raw air sweeping across the scats and field chilled the spectators and players, and lent a resemblance to the contest as seeking pleasure under difficulties. While the weather was un-comfortable to the lookers-on, it was extremely encomfortable and a great drawback to the clayers. They became cold, and their hands numbed and stiffened until they were almost beyond use, and it was surprising that, while in this condition, the players were able to ac-quit themselves in as commendable a manuer is they did. It was not a day on which to besset judgment of the playing qualities of the men, for mone of them could be expected to present themselves in good form and show proficiency under such diverse circumstances. The Brown University nine served here regarded and leasted

Ou the part of the visitors the fielding was good, especially that of Richmond, White, Winslow and S. Green. Their most costly error was made by Meader, and it yielded two runs for the Nationals. The team played well together, and at the last Richmond, Winswell together, and at the bat Richmond, Winslow and White of their side excelled. While the spectators watched the performance of the visitors, still they were more desirous of seeing what the home team would do for themselves. They were not long in finding out.
The exhibition opened tamely, but improved with the progress of the game. Sayder was a little off in throwing, but managed to catch a young man nepping at second. Gerhandt covcred about all of the ground any one man is likely to traverse in one game and a good deal more than most second-baseman do. He demonstrated the value of the man filling the demonstrated the value of the man filling the position. McClelland was treated to some warm compliments, and while one or two balls managed to escape him, still with his custom-ary plack, he faced the music and endoaverod to capture everything coming his way.

Lynch looked natural in the pitcher's position, and showed good command over the ball for the short practice he had enjoyed in handing it. Warner did not have much to do, but soon Warner did not have much to do, but soon discovered that the hot balls he sent to the first were too swift, and reduced their speed. Dignan had only one chance, and that was scarcely within his reach. Baker had one chance and accepted, while Hines had very little to do beyond fielding a ground, which he did handsomely to Soyder. Trutt, at first, had the worst position for a resty man, and was not long in finding it out. Still he did very well for the first day.

very well for the first day.

At the bat Dignan carried off the honors and showed himself competent to bat the phenomenal pitcher, which he did with a vengeance, making as many bases as the remainder of the nine all put together. Appended is the score.

The first representation of the "Banker's Daughter" was given by Collier's Combination at the National Theatre last evening, and was at the National Theatre last evening, and was therety his polyced by a very large audience. As the story of the play was noticed at some length in these columns in yesterday's issue, it is but necessary to add that it is of absorbing interest from the first rise of the curtain to the very last seene. The action is free and natural, the dialogue bright, sparkling and, most happily, free from those cheap and shallow devices and the vulgar clap-trap that may many sofree from those cheap and shallow devices and the vulgar clap-trap that may many so-called society dramass. No one character is made prominent at the expense of another, but each and all are individualized and distinct, and, like the single pieces in a choice bit of mossic, form a pleusing and harmonious whole. The following is the cast: John Strebelow, Mr. Louis James; G. Washington Phipps, Mr. Charles Walcot; the Count DeCarojae, Mr. George W. Farren; Lawrence Westbrook, Mr. E. L. Titton; Mr. Babbage, Mr. Harold Forsterp; Harold Routledge, Mr. Frank Roberts, Mr. Brown, Mr. Joseph A. Wilks; M. Montvillais, Mr. A. P. Hanghton; Dr. Watson, Mr. J. B. Diekson; Lillian, the banker's dangator, Miss Marie Wainwright; Forence St. Vincent Dickson: Lillian, the banker's daughter, Miss Marie Wainwright; Florence St. Vincent Brown, Mrs. Charles Walcot; Mrs. Fanny Hol-come, Mrs. Farrer, and Natalia, Lillian's daughter, La Petite McCarthy. It will be seen that the cast comprises many well-known art-jets, and certainly two old favorities of the Washington public, Louis James and Harold Forsherg. Both were most heartily welcomed, as were also Mr. and Mrs. Charles Walcot two starting artists, who, for a long time, have en-Kinds of Church Music," and Mr. Hopkins will illustrate his remarks with selections of organ pisces from 140 compositions committed to memory by the arist. McCartify, as she is designated, developed uncommon talent for so young a child. Mr. Louis James clothed the part of John Strebelow with all the artistic grace and finish which we have been accustomed to meet in his acting. Mr. Harold Forsberg was capital as Babbage; Mr. Farren presented an excellent picture of the professional duclist, Count Carojac; Mr. Walcot as G. Washington Phipps was the personification of the rushing Yankee doing sight-seeing, love-making and everything else in the most approved business-like manner, and creating shouts of laughter; Mr. Wilks was unsurpassed as poor old Brown, and the rest of the cast acquitted themselves creditably. Ford's Opera-House-" Fairfax.

Another production of Bartley Campbell was presented at Ford's last evening, entitled "Fairfax, or a Story of the Sunny South." Al-though this piece, which is rather too much on the sensational order, will not rank with good form and show proficiency under such adverse circumstances. The Brown University nine arrived bere yeaterday and located at the Imperial Hotel. They are fine-looking gentlemen, of excellent physique, and at once produced a favorable impression. By some inistake the game had been announced for 3:15 p. m., when it was actually set down to be called at 4 o'clock. This error drew many persons to the grounds, who were compelled to spend unnecessary time waiting in the cold, and when game was called there were over 400 p. persons present—a gratifying audience for so unpropitious an afternoon.

The "Browns" came into the field attived in white suits, with black trimmings and black stockings. The Nationals wore their customs ary dress of red and white, in the slunge of last year's uniform, the new one not having servived. In consequence of the sickness of Derby, which has delayed his arrival, Hines' profiered services were accepted and he took charge of the "right garden."

Mr. George H. Latham was selected as umpire and play was called with the Nationals in the play, which has strongled in the love of the widow for Edwin Fairfax and her final acquittal of all four suspicious upon her.
